

You Just Got A Windfall.

Congratulations

For most of us, money arrives on a fairly predictable schedule. But occasionally, you might receive an extra windfall above and beyond your normal paycheck. At work, perhaps you might get a bonus for a job well done. Or, maybe you receive a lump sum from your employer, either via a severance package or a retirement account distribution, as you switch jobs.

Outside the workplace, many baby boomers are in line to inherit significant amounts as their parents pass away. Recent studies estimate that baby boomers will inherit anywhere from 10 trillion to 40 trillion dollars over the next 50 years.

So what should you do if you receive an unexpected windfall?

Face Down Temptation

An unexpected boost to your finances can really make your day, and it's perfectly natural to want to celebrate your good fortune. To be sure, there's nothing wrong with giving yourself a small treat – dinner at a nice restaurant, or tickets to a ball game or concert, for example.

But the urge to spend it all can be tempting. We're fortunate enough to live in a society where many luxuries are readily available, and we all have a wish list of things we promise to buy for ourselves someday: high-tech gadgets, a beautiful new car, a rare piece of collectible memorabilia – the list goes on. Your windfall might seem like the perfect opportunity to fulfill those promises. It's important to know, however, that giving in to such impulses can end up costing you much more than you realize.

Hidden Costs

Suppose Joy, age 45, is changing jobs and is considering what to do with the $50,000 she had in her former employer's 401(k) plan. Joy could decide to cash out that money and spend it. She has a lot of options: she could buy a sleek new car, go on a couple of luxury vacations or buy a state-of-the-art home electronics system. But that $50,000 windfall won't go as far as she anticipates, because it will be subject to taxes and possible penalties for an early withdrawal. As illustrated below, Joy will only get to spend $32,500 – 65 percent – of her money after the federal government takes its share, and it's possible that her state and local governments will want a cut as well.

However, if she chooses to roll over that lump sum into an IRA, the end result differs considerably. If Joy puts that $50,000 into a retirement account such as an IRA, she will postpone taxation and can avoid early withdrawal penalties, giving her the chance to grow a nest egg that will help her reach her retirement goals. Assuming a constant annual return of 8 percent, that $50,000 will grow to more than $233,000<sup>1</sup> over the next 20 years.

NOW WHAT?

Joy would lose that investment potential if she decides to spend her windfall on luxury goods instead of investing it. Factor in the opportunity cost of her purchase, and we can see that Joy essentially paid a potential $233,000 for $32,500 worth of goods that will bring her only temporary satisfaction and eventually lose most or all of their value. Twenty years from now, those vacations will be a distant memory, those high-tech toys will be obsolete, and the sports car will probably be in the junkyard.

However, if she exercises some financial discipline and rolls over her windfall, Joy can end up with a sizeable sum in 20 years that can truly enhance her lifestyle.

What Are The Alternatives?

The best way to avoid hefty opportunity costs, regardless of the source of your windfall, is to take advantage of the chance that your good fortune gives you to improve your financial situation. In the case of a retirement distribution, the best option for many individuals is to roll it over into another tax-advantaged retirement account such as an IRA, where it can continue to work for you.

For other types of windfalls, such as a bonus, there are several options:

- Pay down debt. A windfall can be used to pay off debts such as mortgages or loans earlier than you had originally planned. This will save you from the need to pay future interest fees – a sum that can be sizeable, especially when it comes to high-interest debts such as credit card balances.
- Invest for your future. An appropriate investment vehicle such as a mutual fund can give your windfall the chance to grow into a significant sum that can help you reach your financial goals.
- Shore up your life insurance coverage. Many Americans have inadequate amounts of life insurance, and this oversight puts their family's financial future at risk in case the unexpected happens. Your windfall can be used to establish coverage or to augment any coverage you already have.

- Save money for a rainy day. While you might be basking in your good fortune today, it's a fact that sometimes luck doesn't always swing your way. It's a good idea to have a "rainy day fund" in the form of a savings account or a liquid, interest-bearing vehicle such as a money market fund<sup>2</sup> to safeguard against that possibility. Your windfall can be used to establish such a fund.

The Benefits of a Financial Services Representative

It can be difficult to decide what to do with a one-time monetary bonus that comes your way. That's where your First Investors Financial Services Representative comes in. Your representative will take the time to learn the details of your financial situation, including your risk tolerance, goals and time horizon, so that he or she can make recommendations on ways your windfall can be applied to investment products that have the potential to meet your needs.

Neither First Investors nor its representatives offer tax, legal, or estate-planning services. Clients should contact their personal tax and legal advisers about tax-related investment decisions, estate planning or gifting.
